

The fall of Kabul, the future of regional geopolitics

sanskritias.com/current-affairs/the-fall-of-kabul-the-future-of-regional-geopolitics

(Mains GS 2 : Bilateral, regional and global groupings and agreements involving India and/or affecting India's interests.)

Context:

- The fall of Kabul in the wake of the American withdrawal from Afghanistan will prove to be a defining moment for the region and the future shape of its geopolitics.
- For New Delhi, the fall of Kabul is a moment of reckoning and it must rethink its regional strategies and options.

A vacuum:

- What is most disconcerting is the regional power vacuum in the Eurasian heartland created by the haphazard manner in which the United States withdrew from Afghanistan and its potential knock-on effects.
- An axis of regional powers such as China, Pakistan, Russia, and the Taliban, have already started filling this power vacuum, shaping, thereby, the contours of the region's geopolitics based on their individual and common interests.
- Iran might also jump on this opportunistic bandwagon under the Chinese leadership.

Anti-American feelings:

- It is abundantly clear that each of these countries harbour deep anti-American feelings in varying degrees which will further shrink the American influence in the Eurasian heartland.
- A healthy conversation among the great powers — the U.S., China and Russia — on global and regional challenges is a good sign for India.

- New Delhi must ensure that it does not become a casualty on the south-western Asian geopolitical chessboard.

Advantage China; extremism:

- The post-American power vacuum in the region will be primarily advantageous to China and its grand strategic plans for the region.
- Beijing will further strengthen its efforts to bring every country in the region, except India, on the Chinese Belt and Road Initiative bandwagon, thereby altering the geopolitical and geoeconomic foundations of the region.
- More so, the much-feared Chinese encirclement of India will become ever more pronounced.
- Having been further emboldened by the U.S.'s withdrawal and in stamping its writ on the region, Beijing is likely to become less accommodative towards India including on the Line of Actual Control.
- Even in trade, given the sorry state of the post-COVID-19 Indian economy, India needs trade with China more than the other way round.

Increase in terrorism and extremism:

- The bigger challenge for India though would be a near-certain increase in terrorism and extremism in the region.
- The U.S. presence in Afghanistan, international pressure on the Taliban and Financial Action Task Force worries in Pakistan had a relatively moderating effect on the region's terror ecosystem.
- With the Taliban now back in Kabul, things are bound to change.
- The visuals of the Taliban releasing terrorists from Afghan jails would send a powerful message to their fellow travellers, handlers, and sympathisers in the region.

Little appetite for a regional approach:

- While the neighbouring countries are also worried about terrorism emanating from Afghanistan, the reality is that they are busy making their own private deals with the Taliban to not host terror organisations targeting them.
- There is little appetite for a regional approach to curbing terrorism from a Taliban-led Afghanistan.
- This enables the Taliban to engage in a selective treatment towards terror outfits present there or they have relations with.
- Moreover, given that the international community may have no choice but to recognise the Taliban regime — UN Security Council members such as China and Russia have already indicated their intent to do so — would also mean that the Taliban would hold more power in a bargain on the terror question.
- Sanctions are unlikely to deter an outfit that does not need to bother about the next election.

The real worry:

- It is unlikely that the Taliban will proactively export terror to other countries unless of course for tactical purposes by, say for instance, Pakistan against India.
- The real worry, however, is the inspiration that disgruntled elements in the region will draw from the Taliban's victory against the world's sole superpower.
- To that extent, the triumphalism in Pakistan over the Taliban's victory in Afghanistan could eventually become counterproductive for Pakistan itself.
- Whether Pakistan Prime Minister Imran Khan refers to them as a force that has 'unshackled the chains of slavery' or the country's deep state considers them as a strategic asset, the reality is that many anti-Pakistan terror organisations would be emboldened as well.

Impact on regional interests:

- The return of the Taliban to Kabul has effectively laid India's 'mission Central Asia' to rest.
- India's diplomatic and civilian presence as well as its civilian investments will now depend on the Taliban, and to some extent Pakistan.
- If there is a concerted effort by China, Pakistan and the Taliban to erase the Indian presence from Afghanistan, there is little scope for India to remain there.

India's regional interests:

- What is perhaps not yet understood is how the rise of the anti-America axis (China, Russia, Iran, Pakistan and a Taliban-led Afghanistan) and anti-American sentiments in the region would impact India's regional interests given that it has become closer to the U.S. than ever before in its history.
- We have to wait and see what this mismatch between the region's mood and India's strategic choices would mean for the country.
- There is little doubt that because of these developments, India's regional ambitions will take a major hit in the months and years ahead.

India's foreign policy and its strategic choices:

- The fall of Kabul and the consequent knock-on effects in the region will have several potential implications for India's foreign policy and its strategic choices and behaviour.
- For one, given the little physical access India has to its north-western landmass, its focus is bound to shift more to the Indo-Pacific even though a maritime grand strategy may not necessarily be an answer to its continental challenges.
- Second, New Delhi might also seek to cultivate friendly relations with its smaller neighbours.
- Myanmar is a case in point. India has already indicated that it would not challenge the junta on the coup and its widespread human rights violations.

- This policy is likely to continue even if the Joe Biden administration seeks New Delhi's help in turning up the heat on Myanmar's generals.

India-Pakistan ties:

- The developments in Afghanistan could nudge New Delhi to seek stability, if not peace, with Pakistan.
- While there is little desire in New Delhi today to reopen a broad-based dialogue process with Pakistan, even a 'cold peace' would be in India's interest.
- For Pakistan too, such a 'cold peace' will help it to focus its energies on consolidating its interests and gains in Afghanistan.
- As a result, both sides might refrain from indulging in competitive risk-taking unless something dramatic happens which is always a possibility between the two rivals.
- But the stability between India and Pakistan depends a great deal on how politics in Kashmir plays out, and whether New Delhi is able to pacify the aggrieved sections in the Valley.

Conclusion:

- The lesson for India in the wake of these developments is clear: It will have to fight its own battles.
- So it must make enemies wisely, choose friends carefully, rekindle flickering friendships, and make peace while it can.